One of the most valuable learning and networking events for New Jersey's social sector, CNJG's 2021 Virtual Spring Conference will consider the role of philanthropy in shaping how we work.

The coronavirus pandemic has impacted the future of work in ways we couldn't have imagined. Rapid digital transformation, the abrupt rise in remote jobs, a changing job market, and evolving conversations on the health and safety of employees have all come to the forefront in the past year. But even before the pandemic - the automation of jobs, the gig economy, the ongoing need for reskilling and retraining, changing demographics, green careers, lack of job security and more - has been setting the stage for new and novel ways of working. And implications for grantmakers and their nonprofit partners are extensive, significant and complex.

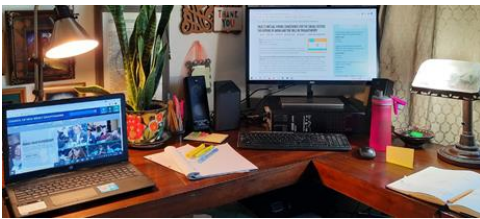

During this timely and important conference, national and local thought-leaders will discuss what philanthropy and nonprofit partners can do to ensure a better future for New Jersey's workforce.

Join the Council of New Jersey Grantmakers on May 19 and 20 for an exploration of what lies ahead as we prepare for and address pressing and unprecedented changes in the world of work.
